Statement

Wiegner modifies urban settings into artificial landscapes. In his installations mood, ambience and spatial perception underline the importance that Wiegner attaches to a dialogue with the observer. For the reopening of the Martin-Gropius-Bau in Berlin, 20 meter long light sculptures were installed in the forecourt, with reference to the Berlin Wall which was previously there. In winter, their intensely red glow imparted warmth and energie. This spectacular object became a popular meeting point and photographic shooting location.

In the summer of 2000, 100 objects from light were installed in the 450 meter long Elbtunnel in St.Pauli, Hamburg submerging it into a mysterious 'subaquatic-light'. Through the colour combinations of the light, this site specific installation gave the impression of an illuminated dive into the depths. Since this time, he has realized various atmospheric light projects in private buildings.

In 2001 he founded together with Susa Pop Public Art Lab for the project "Mobile Museums". For Public Art Lab he designed the Mobile Museum "Heaven" and last year the "Mobile Studios".
